Support 'Keeping the Score' to bring music jobs back to CA!

No film or TV show can come alive without the music – or the musicians.

We are the musicians who teach, perform and record soundtracks in California. We provide musical education to both young children and college students, we perform in clubs, festivals, theaters and concert halls; we enrich every facet of California's diverse musical culture. We can do all this because our film and TV industry has provided the jobs that are necessary for our economic survival. For generations, this homegrown industry has served as a powerful magnet for many of our world's greatest musicians.

But these good jobs that provide a livable wage are running away, threatening California's cultural and educational fabric. Now, too often we see popular film and TV projects shipping our scoring jobs overseas. California's legislature needs to protect musicians' jobs along with other film and television employment. This puts money back into our state's economy, and provides the quality jobs which supports our long-standing community involvement and development of the arts.
